PART I: ACCESS TO INFORMATION FROM WRITTEN TEXTS (70 points)

Read the article below and then answer questions 1-8.

WHAT'S BEST FOR DOLPHINS?

Dolphin shows are among the most popular attractions in the world. At Blue Sea Park in Hong Kong, for example, the dolphins perform four to six times a day, and the show attracts more than seven million visitors a year. People of all ages watch in delight as the animals jump in the air, do wonderful tricks, and obey every command
5 their trainers give them. "Visitors are amazed to see how willing the dolphins are to cooperate with us," says trainer Susan Wong. "It shows them that humans and animals can live together in harmony."

Not everyone agrees. In recent years, animal rights activists all over the world have been objecting to dolphin shows. "The animals in these shows are prisoners," says
10 Miranda Huxley of Save Dolphins International, an organization that collects and publishes evidence of cruelty to dolphins. "They're caught far out at sea, transported hundreds of kilometers, and forced to live in tiny pools just for our entertainment." Activist Ronald Chou, whose group organizes demonstrations against dolphin shows, says that the parks don't provide proper food or health care, and that the dolphins are 15 often treated badly during training.

Blue Sea Park director Allan Young rejects the activists' claims. "Like most parks," he says, "we follow international guidelines that ensure the welfare of animals, and we employ a large veterinary staff to look after our dolphins." In addition, Young insists that visiting places like Blue Sea Park is the only chance most people have to see 20 dolphins. "The experience creates a personal connection with the animals," he says. "So, we're actually helping dolphins by getting the public to care about them."

The activists remain unconvinced. "The ones who benefit from such shows are not the dolphins but the park owners, who are making millions of dollars," says Chou. "And in any case, nothing justifies keeping these animals in captivity. People who 25 really care about dolphins know that they should be allowed to remain in their natural surroundings." Nevertheless, Chou is optimistic about the future. "Protesters have already succeeded in shutting down the shows in several parks," he says. "And more and more people realize that what's being done there is wrong. Eventually the shows will lose so many visitors that the parks will have to close them all down."
